Live at the Mint: What to do When Artists Behave Badly

Now more than ever, creative people are being held accountable for their personal actions and questionable behavior. Where does that leave the art? Are we to dismiss it as unacceptable too?

Join us, in collaboration with Sphere Series, for “Angels to Anathema: What to do When Artists Behave Badly,” a panel discussion on admiring and enjoying work by makers who behave badly in their private lives. Joining us for the discussion is local artist John W. Love, Jr. and Emily Nussbaum, Pulitzer Prize winner, television critic for The New Yorker and author of I Like to Watch: Arguing My Way Through the TV Revolution.

Join us in welcoming Emily Nussbaum as she signs her book I Like to Watch in the Mint Museum Store following the Live at the Mint discussion.

Live at the Mint, presented by Fifth Third Bank, celebrates Charlotte's dynamic arts community with a rotating lineup of events and performers. Each week features a new main act, from performance art to lectures with leading artists, provocative films to gallery tours with community leaders—and lots of specially-crafted art activities and craft cocktails in between. Every Live at the Mint is an intentionally layered experience that incorporates the permanent collection and special exhibitions. The result: The Mint is the place to be on Wednesday nights.
